

How Communication as Evolved in the last Decade

Over the past 10 years we have seen several changes in the communication industry. Whether it's the technology of our mobile phones or even how journalists submit their stories, the world continuously evolves. It doesn't matter if you're standing still or not, because things can come and go in the blink of an eye. Today we want to focus on several different areas of communication, which includes pay monthly mobile plans. Each one of them is making people's lives easier and more convenient. However, for some it's a complete headache trying to keep up with everything. Here are some of the changes: One of the first thoughts has to revolve around the Internet. Ten years ago, most people will using it primarily for emails and a few other entertainment needs. Today you can find everything from videos to social networks that enables everyone to stay in touch with one another. Even if you want to find someone from high school and it's been 20 years since you heard anything about them, the Internet makes it possible. Another thing to consider is the way we get our news. In the good old days you would head to the local gas station in the morning and purchase a newspaper. Nowadays everything can be found online, so you can keep up with current events or anything else in a flash. Eventually traditional printed newspapers will disappear in most countries. Mobile phones have definitely changed the communication world. A simple choice would be the pay as you go mobile options. These are great for individuals who don't talk on the phone a lot, but need them from time to time. There are no contracts, so the only thing you have to do is pay for it when you use it. The most notable change to phones in the past decade is being able to access the Internet from them. In the beginning you could only read text, because images weren't available. Then we started seeing smartphones like Androids, and now we're looking at iPhone 4s. It's like having your own little computer in hand and still being able to talk on the phone. Don't forget about places like Facebook and Twitter either. Thanks to the 'status' approach you can keep up with everyone in seconds. Definitely a far cry from the pay as you go mobile choices, but what it comes down to is everything is becoming mobile. Even websites are making the way they are viewed more appealing to mobile users. We've come a long way from the telephone line connections and thrust ourselves into 21st century technology. It's only a matter of time before new things hit the market and help us evolve even more over the next 10 years. Get more information on mobiles or mobile contracts on the Virgin Mobile website.
