

The Best Cell Phone Plans

Inside two decades, the cell phone has become a huge part of most individual's lives, both private lives and business lives. In the early Nineties, not many individual had a cell phone, now it seems that every child has one. In business, it has come to mean that the boss is always available but he or she does not need a secretary merely to take messages. It is even more so in the Third World because they never had a decent network of public phones like we did in the West, so they have leap-frogged the landline to a large extent, exactly the same as in the West telephone firms are removing landlines because they are being vandalized more frequently than used. It is reckoned that a cell phone is the most essential addition to any business in the Third World that wishes to expand. Therefore, it is worth taking the trouble to acquire a phone that does what you would like it to and at a realistic price. Well, most phones in the same cost bracket will do roughly the same things, so calculate how much you can afford to pay for the phone, then find out from friends and family which operator gives the best coverage where you live and then ask for a list of the cell phone plans that they have accessible. Choosing the correct cell phone plan for you is a important part of keeping your telephone charges down. There are two fundamental types of plan: the prepaid and the monthly charge. There is no credit check necessary for a prepaid SIMM card plan, and the monthly charge system might take a few days. There is not always a lot of difference between the two systems, but it does depend from country to country. Some monthly programmes include telephone loss insurance. One of the best private cell phone plans is the family plan. Typically, this plan includes up to five phones and there is only one bill at the end of the month. This is a very beneficial plan for families, because often the plan includes free chat between the phones on its network or a guaranteed number of free minutes. Some even permit a few numbers to be added from outside the family network plan. A prepaid cell phone plan would almost certainly suit you if you merely want to leave the phone in the car for emergencies, but be sure that you check the plan carefully. I just signed up for a very decent plan, which charges about 90% less for calls than other operators, yet I now know, that any prepayment has to be used within three days or the phone ceases working until more money is put in. This plan is totally unsuitable for me as I am not a frequent user. Be wary and check out all the small print although you can usually switch plans if you make a mistake without any penalty. Owen Jones, the author of this article, writes on a variety of subjects, but is now concerned with searching for the best cell phone family plans. If you would like to know more, please visit our web site at Family Plans For Cell Phones.